FROM THE PRINCIPAL'S DESK

Dear Parents

We are fortunate to belong to a beautiful land of diverse cultures and heritage where unity in diversity is our strength. We take pride in being a secular nation, embracing and celebrating our similarities as well as differences.

As we step into the vibrant month of October, our students are filled with excitement and anticipation as in this month we celebrate an array of festivals that showcase India's rich diversity.

To honor this diversity we have planned to observe "Culture Day" - a unique event where we will showcase the heritage, food, costumes, artifacts and traditions of various Indian states. Our students will embark on a cultural journey across the country, exploring its vast tapestry. Through this event, we wish to encourage our students to imbibe the rich traditions, embody the values of secularism and inclusivity with the aim to preserve our rich cultural heritage.

We will also showcase a spectacular cultural extravaganza where our talented students will perform songs and dances representing different states.

We are sure that you are in agreement and with us in this journey of learning and we look forward to your cooperation and support.

STUDENT'S CORNER

THE ENCHANTED TREE

Once upon a time, there lived a widow whose name was Julia. She worked in a rich man's house as a maid. She had a sweet, helping boy named Jenson. He helped her to work inside the house and did all the chores around the house whenever his mother was not at home or when she was sick. They were not very well off. His mother got her salary every month. So, when she used to come with her salary, she also used to bring some provisions from the store nearby. The provisions were mainly food items and some other things. So, when his mother came home with the provisions, Jenson used to help his mother take everything out and help her cook the meal. They used to have a filling meal together once a month.

One day, Jenson was alone in the house. His mother had left early for her work, when he had just woken up. "The breakfast is in the kitchen and don't make it too late or the breakfast will get cold," his mother had said to him when he woke up. Jenson was an obedient boy. So, obeying his mother's words, he woke up quickly, brushed his teeth and ate his breakfast on time. Then he got bored. So, he decided to go for a walk in the village. "Don't venture too far if you want to go for a walk," his mother had always told him when she left for work. He took notice of his surroundings and on the way, he saw a tree with a weird shape to it. He had never, in his life, seen a weird shaped tree like that. He approached the tree slowly and saw that the tree was laden with juicy and fat golden apples. Now, Jenson was not a greedy boy so he did not try to steal the fruit, even though it was tempting. He just looked at the fruits with awe and wonder because he had never had such fat and lustrous golden apples in his life. Then when he was getting ready to leave, there came a voice, "Hello, little boy." Jenson looked around but there was no one. "Here, over here." Then he turned around to face the tree. To his surprise, he saw a tree opening its eyes. "Hello boy! What is your name?" asked the tree in a pleasant voice. Jenson told his name to the tree. "Well, you are an honest boy. Would you like an apple?", asked the tree. "Well thank you Mr. Tree", said Jenson. The tree gave an apple to the boy and Jenson was happy enough to eat it. Jenson then thanked the tree for the apple. "It was really nice. Goodbye, Mr. Tree", said Jenson and he started to leave. "Wait", said the tree, "I have something to give to you". He gave Jenson a whole lot of golden apples and a basket to carry them in. "This is my gift to you for your honest behaviour", said the tree with a smile. Jenson was delighted and he took a whole basket of apples and ran straight home.

When his mother reached home, she was surprised to see all the apples and asked Jenson where they came from. Jenson then told her the tale and his mother was both astonished and extremely pleased with Jenson's behaviour. "Well, good deeds really pay off. Now we have enough apples to sell in the market", said Julia. As they were big and juicy apples, she got a very good sum of money for them. In fact, she bought a new house and toys for her beloved Jenson. They did not have to worry about money anymore and lived happily ever after.
